Alcohol

Written By: Steven Page/Stephen Duffy

From The Album: Barenaked Ladies: STUNT

Alcohol, my permanent accessory
Alcohol, a party-time necessity
Alcohol, alternative to being like yourself
Alcohol, I still drink to your health.

I love you more than I did the week before I discovered Alcohol
Forget the caffe latte, screw the raspberry ice-tea
A Mailbu, Coke for you, a g and t for me Alcohol, your songs resolve like my life never will someone else is always picking up my bill.

I love you more than I did the week before I discovered Alcohol
Alcohol, please would you forgive me?
While I cannot love myself, I'll use something else.

I thought that Alcohol was just for those with nothing else to do
I thought that drinking just to get drunk was a waste of precious booze
But now I know there is a place and time I can choose to walk the fine line between self-control and self-abuse.

Would you please ignore, that you found me on the floor trying on your camisole?
Would you please forgive me? For I cannot love myself so I turn to something else.
